The scouting mission targeted goalkeepers within La Liga earning under €500,000 annually, aiming to find a reliable option for FC Antigravity's high defensive line and possession-based system. Two candidates were evaluated, with Marco Lindelöf emerging as the top recommendation due to his superior defensive attributes, pass accuracy, and consistent clean sheet record. While neither player fills an urgent squad gap, Lindelöf offers a slight upgrade over current options and fits well within the club's financial parameters, ensuring sustainable wage management without compromising tactical needs.

"Lindelöf is a solid tactical fit as a goalkeeper for FC Antigravity's 4-3-3 high line and possession-based system. His defensive reliability and passing ability support the build-up play, though his athleticism is moderate for the pressing demands. He represents a slight upgrade over Molina but does not address a pressing squad need."

STRENGTHS

- ✓ Strong defensive and physical attributes align with the need for a reliable goalkeeper in a high defensive line system
- ✓ Pass accuracy (78%) meets minimum possession-based build-up requirement
- ✓ Consistent clean sheets and experience at a high level
- ✓ Slightly better stamina and physicality than Molina, supporting high-intensity pressing system

RISK FACTORS

- ✗ Sprint speed (52) and stamina (72) below ideal for a pressing system requiring high athleticism
- ✗ Limited attacking contribution and dribble success reduce ability to play out from the back under pressure
- ✗ No direct statistical benchmarks for goalkeepers in the tactical document, limiting scoring in that category
- ✗ Squad already stable in goalkeeper position; signing would be rotation or upgrade rather than filling a gap

TACTICAL REFERENCE

The tactical document emphasizes a goalkeeper comfortable with possession (pass accuracy $\geq 78\%$) and capable of organizing a high defensive line. Lindelöf's 78% pass accuracy and strong defending (78) align with these requirements, supporting the possession-based build-up and high press.

Marco Lindelöf is a seasoned goalkeeper currently playing for Bayer Leverkusen, aged 29, who stands out as the leading candidate with a tactical fit score of 68. His defensive reliability and physical presence are well-suited to FC Antigravity's 4-3-3 high line and possession-based approach. Lindelöf boasts a pass accuracy of 78%, meeting the minimum threshold required for effective build-up play from the back, and his consistent clean sheet record—14 in 2021/22, 17 in 2022/23, and 15 in 2023/24—demonstrates his capacity to perform at a high level. Physically, his stamina (72) and aerial duels won (72%) support the demands of a pressing system, although his sprint speed (52) and limited attacking contribution temper his overall athleticism. Despite these minor limitations, Lindelöf's blend of experience, tactical compatibility, and physical attributes make him a valuable rotation or incremental upgrade option. His overall rating of 85 and potential of 86 reflect a player at the peak of his abilities, capable of reinforcing the squad's defensive solidity. The player's wage demands (€35,000/week) align well with the club's salary cap, offering excellent value for a goalkeeper of his calibre. Lindelöf's profile fits the club's possession-based, high-press tactical requirements, making him the preferred choice among the candidates.

"Molina is a competent goalkeeper option but slightly less suited to FC Antigravity's tactical demands than Lindelöf. His pass accuracy and athletic metrics fall short of the ideal for a possession-based, high-press system. He offers cost-effective depth but is not a priority signing."

STRENGTHS

✓ Reliable defensive stats and consistent clean sheets

✓ Good value for money within wage constraints

✓ Pass accuracy (76%) close to possession-based minimum

✓ Physicality and aerial duels won (70) support defensive solidity

RISK FACTORS

✗ Pass accuracy below the 78% threshold for build-up play

✗ Lower stamina (71) and sprint speed (51) reduce suitability for high-intensity pressing demands

✗ Limited dribbling and attacking contribution

✗ No clear squad gap to fill; would be a rotation option

TACTICAL REFERENCE

The tactical document requires goalkeepers to support possession with pass accuracy $\geq 78\%$. Molina's 76% is marginally below this, potentially limiting build-up fluidity. His defensive stats are solid but do not fully meet the physical and technical profile desired.

Sebastián Molina, ranked second with a tactical fit score of 63, is a competent goalkeeper who provides reliable defensive coverage and consistent clean sheets. At 29 years old, Molina offers good value within the club's wage constraints, demanding a slightly lower wage than Lindelöf (€33,000/week). His pass accuracy of 76% is just below the ideal 78% threshold for the club's possession-oriented build-up, and his stamina (71) and sprint speed (51) are marginally lower, which reduces his suitability for the high-intensity pressing system. Molina's strengths lie in his physicality and aerial ability, with 70% of aerial duels won, supporting defensive solidity. However, his limited dribbling success and attacking contribution restrict his effectiveness when playing out from the back under pressure. While he would serve well as a cost-effective depth option, Molina is not the priority signing given the club's tactical ambitions and current squad stability. His overall rating of 83 and potential of 84 suggest a reliable but less dynamic option compared to Lindelöf.

TACTICAL EVALUATION SUMMARY

Both candidates are goalkeepers competing for a role in a team that prioritizes a high defensive line, possession-based build-up, and a high-intensity pressing system. Neither player is a transformative signing but both fit the formation perfectly as goalkeepers (25/25). Lindelöf scores higher on style compatibility due to slightly better passing and defensive attributes, aligning better with the possession and pressing demands. Statistical benchmarks are limited for goalkeepers, but Lindelöf's clean sheet consistency and physicality edge Molina. Squad balance considerations show no urgent need for a goalkeeper, so either signing would be for rotation or incremental upgrade. Overall, Lindelöf is the stronger tactical fit (68) compared to Molina (63), primarily due to his better alignment with the possession and defensive principles outlined in the tactical document.
